Crime never pays off. Especially in Texas. And especially in El Paso. Sun City ranked lowest in total crime in the U.S. for 2012. However, if you or someone you know is one of the few unlucky to have been arrested and charged with a crime in El Paso County, FindLaw has information that may be able to help. Because arrests occur in so many different situations, it's hard to predict exactly what will happen. This article provides general information about what to expect in many types of criminal cases in El Paso. To be arrested if you were arrested, at the scene or by arrest warrant, you likely spoke to the men and women in blue from the El Paso Police Department, the El Paso County Sheriff's Office, or the Texas Highway Patrol. Unlike the exploited cops you may have seen on TV, cops must follow some basic rules during your arrest. If they neglect these proceedings, it could jeopardize the prosecutor's case against you. Miranda warnings and imprisonment you should read your Miranda rights: you have the right to remain silent. You have the right to an attorney. Anything you add up can and will be used against you in a court of law... The police then have two options: take you to jail on the reservation or release you with the promise of appearing at a later date. If you're taken to a prison in El Paso, plan to spend some quality time in a downtown jail or prison wing. If you are a victim of a crime and want to know the status of an inmate, Texas has a system known as VINE. It is a nationwide service that through crime victims can use the phone or internet to search for information about their offender's custody status and register to be notified by phone and email when the offender's custody status changes. Vine free number is 877-894-8463. Bail if you want to go home, you will either be released on your bail or you will have to pay bail. Bail is money you have to pay the courts to be released from prison pending trial. You usually have to put 10% of the total amount of bail that the judge sets in your case to get out. Arraignment at your first appearance before a judge is at the arraignment. The judge will advise you on your criminal charges, ask if you have a lawyer or want a court-appointed lawyer, find out how you will plead to the charges (most people plead not guilty at this time), determine whether to change the initial amount of bail and then set a timetable for future trial dates. What happens next depends on whether you're dealing with a misdemeanor or a felony. Minor offenses are divided into three separate classes, A to C, where A is the most serious. They're less serious than crotches, but remember, a conviction or guilty plea could have consequences for your career and your freedom. If you are not a citizen, a misdemeanor can also affect your immigration status. Common offences in El Paso include driving while Possession of illegal drugs, and certain types of theft, just to aromatly aromatly several. The maximum sentence you receive if convicted is up to one year in prison and a $4,000 fine. Some crimes carry additional penalties such as mandatory counseling or substance abuse rates. Your case will be set for a plea bargain hearing, where the district attorney and your lawyer will discuss the case with the judge and try to reach a verdict. If they can't, you'll go to trial. At trial, a jury will decide whether you're guilty or innocent. If the jury finds you not guilty, the case will be over and you can go free. If the jury can't decide, it's called a hung jury, and the D.A. can retest the case at a later date. If convicted, the judge will impose your sentence. Criminal offenses are very serious cases with very serious consequences including imprisonment and major consequences for the rest of your life. El Paso felonies range from reckless wounding to child, kidnapping, robbery, or murder. Texas has five types of offenses with penalties ranging from 180 days in prison to the death penalty. Criminal cases are being investigated by grand jurist as a lead for arraignment. The grand jury is a screening panel of people selected from the community to serve six months of a semester reviewing cases to determine if there are probable cause that someone committed the crime they are accused of. If the grand jury finds probable cause, they'll publish a real indictment bill. The case will then be assigned to a court of character. If the grand jury produces no bill, the case will end. The prosecutor has the right to present a case to another grand jury if someone enters into no bill, however this is rare, and is usually only invoked in cases that have gathered media attention. Plea bargain and pre-trial hearing The next stage of the offence is the pre-trial hearing. The district attorney and defense attorney can meet in the judge's office to discuss your case and sometimes enter a plea. A pretrial trial gives your lawyer a chance to gather information from the prosecution, investigate that evidence, and possibly solve your case without trial. It is also an opportunity to make important petitions challenging the prosecution case. If you go to trial, the D.A. must prove you're guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. You have the right to a jury trial in which 12 randomly selected members of the community decide your guilt or innocence. Both the prosecutor and the defense will present evidence. Remember, you can't be forced to testify. If the jury finds you guilty, the judge will sentence you. Criminal cases can be serious, impact will last on your life. You have options and rights. It might be a good idea if you're charged with a felony, especially a serious one, to consider consulting with a local criminal lawyer. Home Destinations USA + Canada USA. El Paso (EP) bought itself more recovery time. With the clock ticking toward a shareholder showdown that could topple the company's entire leadership, El Paso announced late Wednesday that it had sunk into a critical financing deal. By pledging nearly all of its expensive pipelines as collateral, El Paso promised a revolving $3 billion line of credit that would help move the company by mid-2005. The new facility replaces an old $3 billion bank line that, with the extension of his term, would have expired 13 months earlier. The financing deal made the company active. News of the bank's deal, along with two fresh buy recommendations, pushed the stock up 5.6 percent to a two-month high of $7.13 in late morning trading. But even Lehman Brothers, which upgraded the stock from underweight to overweight, reinforced its optimism with some caution. With heavy dependency on a secondary shutdown, El Paso is still riding a fine line between recovery and slide into the need for more asset sales, wrote analyst Richard Gross on Thursday. UBS Warburg, which reiterated its buying rating, also warned that El Paso remains unsuitable for investors with low-risk tolerance. But both companies were generally cheerful, predicting that Pso would have the means necessary to recover and move on. Carl Miller, a former senior El Paso executive who now leads an energy-related acquisition company, remains skeptical. According to Miller, they committed to all of their material assets to finally finally terminate the financing deal. They're not fixing the company. They're just giving the banks more confidence. Libor Daistil, Lehman Brothers tucked into the new financing conditions as quite positive. The company was preparing for a much higher interest rate - a 7% plus a 7% instead of a Libor plus 3.5% - that would have slipped away from El Paso's profits. After reviewing the details of the deal, Lehman raised its profit forecasts in 2003 to El Paso from 60 cents to 85 cents per share. It also raised its 12-month price target for the stock from $6 to $9 and predicted the shares could double over the next three years. Meanwhile, El Paso has pledged to cut costs in an effort to help the bottom line. After analysts sniffed out El Paso's original cuts - which would have cut costs by $150 million by the end of next year - the company raised the stakes. It Another $250 million in cost reductions, and in writing last week for employees, warned that it would aggressively attack any waste. A preliminary review of our company's costs reveals a troubling trend, wrote John Somerhalder, president of the company's pipeline division. We need to bring our costs in line with what we're going to be -- not what we were. El Paso emphasized that the company's expenses did not decrease at the same rate as the company's assets, which are offloaded to pay down the debt. Using a new strategy - known as the Clean Slate Initiative - El Paso invites employees to help outside experts identify opportunities to save. Frank Powell, the former vice president of government and public affairs at Coastal, said El Paso has historically spent more money than it needs. El Paso is not a bona fide company, he said simply. And it never really should have been before. Powell is among a crowd of former coastal workers supporting a proxy fight partly funded by Coastal founder Oscar Wyatt. Opponents hope to topple el Paso's entire board of directors and replace him with a group of energy veterans at the company's annual meeting in June. Although Wyatt is not himself a candidate for the board, the outspoken El Paso critic is expected to have some influence on the board he now supports. Meanwhile, he attracted considerable support from the very employees who once feared him. Oscar Wyatt is shrewd and fahlisng - and ruthless, said a former beach worker. But at least he treated everyone like dirt. Dirt.
